INTRODUCTION

OVERVIEW

the 1950s, 60s and 70s being particularly high. The lack of available resources for housing construction, alongside the speed at which economic, sociological, and technological changes are produced in the contemporary context, lead to serious obsolescence (García Vázquez, 2015), meaning inadequacy in terms of current requirements (García-Pérez et al., 2020). As a consequence, it is not uncommon to find residential neighbourhoods where housing has a usable floor area below that of contemporary standards per inhabitant and needs to be transformed for use by families of a heterogeneous nature (couples with-out children, the elderly, single parent families, one person households, shared housing) or for new uses

Advantage

The international Solar Decathlon competition is an opportunity to work on the development of projects that integrate urban regeneration in the context of energy-efficient housing and optimal indoor environmental conditions. This competition challenges participating universities from around the world, in collaboration with institutions and businesses, to design, build and set up a self-sufficient prototype dwelling powered by renewable energy.

Disadvantage

Sometimes what you envision may not necessarily be practical. When you engage an interior designer, keep an open mind to explore options and suggestions that you may not have considered

Conclusion

1While their study concerns individuals suffering from mental health problems, the authors rightfully emphasise that “niching” as a concept applies to all kind of urban subjects.

2One example illustrates yali (“pressure”) and xin, the “heart” speak of different registers of experience. One young man talked about the “pressures” of life in Shanghai, by which he referred mainly to the cost of living. As he confessed his gambling habits, I asked him whether he engaged in such activities in order to “alleviate pressure” (huanjie yali). “Not to alleviate pressure, but because of my bad moods” (xinqing bu hao), he answered.
